TOPIC 1: ECONOMY

The U.S. economy grew at a record-shattering pace in the third quarter as businesses reopened from the coronavirus shutdown. Still, the nation remains in a deep hole from the COVID-induced recession.

Gross domestic product, the broadest measure of goods and services produced across the economy, surged by 33.1% on an annualized basis in the three months from July through September, the Commerce Department said in its first reading of the data Thursday. The previous post-World War II record was a 16.7% increase in 1950.

Refinitiv economists expected the report to show the economy had expanded by 31%.

But the headline figure obscures the full picture: The economy contracted at an annual revised rate of 31.4% in the previous quarter, the sharpest decline in modern American history. Looking at the quarterly data, the nation's GDP grew 7.4% from the second to the third quarter, compared with a 9% decline between the first and second quarters.

The economy remains 3.5% smaller than at the end of 2019.

"The economy in the third quarter will still be far below what it was pre-COVID, so far below that the depth of the recession even after that record growth will still be as deep as a profound recession, like the 2008 recession," Justin Wolfers, a University of Michigan economist, told FOX Business before the latest data.

The Commerce Department calculates the GDP on a quarter-over-quarter basis as if that level of growth were sustained for a full year; in times of huge swings up or down, it can exaggerate both the decline in growth and the subsequent rebound.

Because the third quarter is measured against the second quarter -- a historically low baseline -- any bounceback at all would appear huge. The U.S. economy came to a near standstill earlier this year to slow the spread of the novel coronavirus, which has infected more than 9 million Americans and killed over 227,000, the most in the world.

"Even though this quarter's GDP came in relatively strong, we have to keep in mind that this grade comes on a big curve -- this is a benchmark against the drastic hole we started to climb out of in [the second quarter]," said Steve Rick, chief economist at CUNA Mutual Group.

Still, the Trump administration took a victory lap on the GDP figure, touting it as "absolute validation of President Trump's policies, which create jobs and opportunities for Americans in every corner of the country."

"The President built the world's best economy once, and he's rapidly doing it again, proving that cutting taxes and reducing regulations and red tape clear the way for American ingenuity and our entrepreneurial spirit to thrive," Tim Murtaugh, communications director for the Trump 2020 campaign, said in a statement.

The economy's coronavirus-induced swoon, illustrated in the previous quarter's decline in GDP, undercut once-vibrant growth that had been a vital plank of the president's reelection bid. On the campaign trail against Democratic challenger Joe Biden, Trump has told voters that the economy has already begun to bounce back from the decline, but only he can completely restore it.

The third-quarter growth reported Thursday was spurred by a resurgence in consumer spending, which accounts for roughly two-thirds of the nation's GDP, as states eased shutdown measures over the summer and employers rehired workers. Personal consumption increased by 40.7%, a record, last quarter. Business investment and housing also posted substantial gains.

Economists worry that growth is starting to plateau in the final three months of the year amid a spike in new COVID cases and the lack of another round of government relief.

For months, Congress has struggled to reach an agreement on another round of emergency relief for families and businesses — negotiations first collapsed in early August, prompting Trump to sign four executive measures intended to provide relief to families still reeling from the virus-induced crisis, including temporarily extending supplemental jobless aid at $300 a week.

But that aid is beginning to expire, and lifelines that propped up the economy in the early weeks of the pandemic — like the $670 billion Paycheck Protection Program, a one-time $1,200 stimulus check, and sweetened unemployment benefits — lapsed months ago.

On top of that, millions of laid-off workers could lose their jobless benefits altogether by the end of the year, with the enhanced unemployment benefits Congress approved in March set to expire on Dec. 31.

"We're in dire need of additional fiscal stimulus to help build a bridge for people to get through this recession and combat accelerating financial distress," Rick said.

TOPIC 2: CONFERENCE CALLS

On Monday, October 26, the National Veterans Employment and Education Division met with board members from the National Defense Industry Association to discuss provisions in the draft of the National Defense Authorization Act and received an update on their upcoming board meetings and conferences.

On Monday, October 26, the National Veterans Employment and Education Division had a conversation with NAVPA leadership to discuss VA's new requirements for 85/15 and their potential negative impact on veterans' access to quality programs and continued enrollment. Worked on one-pager and discussed with other Veterans Service Organizations (VSOs). Worked on Risk-Based Survey risk matrices and talked with Risk-Based Survey Program Director Woodall on the issues surrounding assessing Veterans Affairs data and plans for the rollout of the pilot. Prepped for the National Association of Veterans Program Administrators (NAVPA) panel and planned meetings with other VSOs on the panel. They worked on oversight and issues surrounding distance learning mandated by the pandemic's impact on higher education.

On Monday, October 26, the National Veterans Employment and Education Division Prepped for the NAVPA panel and planned a meeting with other VSOs on the panel. We worked on oversight and issues surrounding distance learning mandated by the pandemic's impact on higher education.

On Tuesday, October 27, the National Veterans Employment and Education Division attended the 45th National Virtual NAVPA Conference. Assisted President of NAVPA with final plans and then moderated the NAVPA Policy and Advocacy Panel. Major discussion points were legislation passed to assist Veterans in higher education during the COVID 19 pandemic.

On Tuesday, October 27, the National Veterans Employment and Education Division held conversations on what remains to be done during this time- primarily HR 4625. And HR 7111, which may need to wait until the next Congress. Conversation with J. Kamin and Nicole S. on the 90/10 issue and possibility of moving this in this Congress.

On Tuesday, October 27, the National Veterans Employment and Education Division discussed with Senate Veterans Affairs Committee (SVAC) staff on H.R.4625. It will be stalled until the lame-duck session when there is the hope of passage.

On Wednesday, October 28, the National Veterans Employment and Education Division attended the second day of the NAVPA Conference. We listened to the Veterans Affairs Central Office (VACO) presentations, Director Bogue, and her staff. There was a great deal of interest and concern about 85/15, particularly the new administrative requirements. Bogue announced that they would not require reporting by months end, and they were seeking to address school concerns. NAVPA membership, under the able leadership of President Del Signore, passed a resolution asking for a reset and that the new requirements would not be rolled back.

On Wednesday, October 28, the National Veterans Employment and Education Division met with VACO, EdCounsel, and NASAA leadership to discuss the new RBS model. It is apparent that some at VA, particularly Dr. Dombrowski, will resist change to the new model. Concerns about the loss of Compliance Survey work and how RBS will fit into existing VA reporting systems. Conversations afterward with VSOs, NAVPA president, and some advisory council members to seek a path forward.

On Wednesday, October 28, the National Veterans Employment and Education Division attended the WorkCred Government Credentialing Network Meeting. TOPIC 4: EMPLOYMENT

According to official statistics, young military veterans' unemployment rate ages 18-24 reached 29 percent in 2011. This report seeks to put that statistic in perspective by examining the historical time-series of veteran unemployment, comparing the veteran unemployment rate to non-veterans, and examining how veteran unemployment varies with time since military separation. Between 2000 and 2011, younger veterans were, on average,

3.4 percentage points more likely to be unemployed than similarly situated younger non-veterans. However, this difference between a veteran and non-veteran unemployment falls rapidly with age and time since military separation. The report concludes that the best available evidence supports the hypothesis that relatively high rates of veteran unemployment reflect the fact that veterans, especially younger veterans, are more likely to have recently separated from a job — namely, military service — and, consequently, are more likely to be engaged in job search, which takes time, especially during periods of slow economic growth. The available evidence lends little support to the hypothesis that veterans are inherently disadvantaged in the civilian labor market. Limiting unemployment benefits available to recently separated veterans would likely reduce the length of unemployment spells. Still, the net effect of such a policy action on the long-term federal budget is unclear. There is minimal evidence on the effectiveness of other federal policies to facilitate veterans' transition into the civilian labor market.

Key Findings:

It Takes Time for a Young Veteran to Find a Civilian Job

- Young veterans are more likely to be unemployed than their non-veteran peers, but this gap closes quickly with age and time since separation from the military.
- The best available evidence supports the hypothesis that relatively high veteran unemployment rates reflect the fact that veterans, especially younger veterans, are more likely to have recently separated from a job — namely, military service. Consequently, they are more likely to be engaged in a job search, which takes time, especially during periods of slow economic growth.
- The available evidence lends little support to the hypothesis that veterans are inherently disadvantaged in the civilian labor market.

Five Hypotheses for High Veteran Unemployment, Examined in Light of Research Findings

- High veteran unemployment could be caused by poor health, selection, employer discrimination, skills mismatch, or job search.
- Of these five possible causes, only job search speaks to the short-term spike in unemployment found in recent data on veterans newly separated from the military. Although they may be more likely than non-veteran peers to suffer an injury that affects the ability to work, the evidence does not support this as a cause of elevated unemployment. According to the data, veterans are no more likely than non-veteran peers to have observable characteristics that would lead to difficulty finding a civilian job (in fact, there is evidence of the opposite effect). Whatever skills mismatch may exist during the transition to the civilian labor market seems to be quickly overcome with education and training. Some employers discriminate against veterans, and more research is needed to understand this phenomenon. Still, there is no existing evidence that employer discrimination plays a significant role in veterans' employment outcomes. Ultimately, the preponderance of evidence at this time points toward the simple explanation that veterans, being newly separated from (military) jobs, will inevitably be unemployed for a period while they search for suitable new ones.

The American Legion will continue to investigate these critical findings from the Rand Corporation Research Study. It highlights areas where the Legion has identified crucial areas for improvement and aligns with Legion resolutions. For the time being, the Legion will continue to hold virtual career fairs where veteran unemployment is high.

TOPIC 5: VETERAN HOUSING AND HOMELESSNESS

If you've followed the race for 16th Judicial District attorney, you've heard about drug courts, changing the way bail is set, providing better funding for public defenders, justice reform generally, and that old favorite, "thinking outside the box." Incumbent Bo Duhe and challenger Lori Landry, a former 16th JDC judge, have lots of ideas. One of them caught me by surprise. It came up during Duhe's presentation Thursday at a St. Mary Parish School Board meeting.

Duhe talked about looking into the creation of a veterans court. This isn't meant to be an endorsement of either candidate. But veterans courts? There's an idea that deserves an endorsement. We've seen other types of courts aimed at a specific class of offenders, based on the idea that those offenders need some type of adjudication other than locking them up for a while and turning them back out. Juvenile courts and drug courts are examples. If you look at some statistics about veterans, you'll get the idea that they face specific types of problems that seem unlikely to be solved by a conventional approach.

Incarcerated Veterans Attending a Transition Workshop in Hopes to Prevent Homelessness

—On any given night, there are nearly 50,000 homeless veterans, according to the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development. Veterans are 2% of the U.S. population but 11% of the homeless population.

—The Veterans Administration reported in 2019 that the number of suicides among veterans had declined. But the numbers were still alarming. The decrease in four years was from 22 suicides per day to 17. The Military Times reports that some experts say the VA is drastically under-counting the number of veteran suicides.

—The VA says a fifth of veterans who seek treatment for post-traumatic stress disorder also have a drug or alcohol problem. A third of veterans seeking treatment for substance abuse also have PTSD. And veterans with PTSD and substance abuse problems are prone to binge-drinking, the VA said.

It's been a privilege over the last 35 years to interview veterans of every American war since World War I. As a group, they displayed a lot of courage in talking about their experiences. But sometimes, it was clear the memories were difficult to deal with.

One man who served in Vietnam as a helicopter door-gunner broke down and cried in our office as he talked about what he'd seen. Another veteran, a bomber crew member who was shot down and taken prisoner by the Germans, talked my ear off. A relative told me the man remained preoccupied with his POW experience after what was then half a century.

My World War I interview was with the father-in-law of a co-worker in Missouri. She called him Nother Daddy. He talked about his life before the war, and he talked about wandering around France looking for food after the armistice. But I couldn't get him to talk about what combat was like. His family told me later that he'd never talked much about his war experiences.

The closest I got was when he leaned forward in his chair to tell me what it was all about. At the time, in the mid-eighties, I had long hair and a full beard. “Whiskers,” ’Nother Daddy said, “you don’t want none of what I had.”

My own experience with relatives and co-workers makes me think that veterans' particular problems are not limited to those who have gone into combat. Separation from the military even in peacetime seems to be a problem for some veterans, although certainly not for all. And sometimes, those problems manifest themselves as substance abuse or emotional problems of one kind or another. There seems to be a lot of variation in the way other jurisdictions have developed veterans' courts. But the common threads seem to be a request from the veteran to have the case handled by a veteran court and agreement among prosecutor, judge, and defendant that it's appropriate. The court would be empowered to explore options other than just jail time or probation for veterans. The options would presumably include mental health counseling or substance abuse treatment.

We often talk about the bad choices that offenders make, the choices that put them behind bars. Veterans chose to serve their country, knowing that they could be called on to put their own lives at risk. They deserve a second chance.

TOPIC 8: EDUCATION

Another week, another explosive example of GI Bill fraud. Nimesh Shah, 37, owner of Blue Star Learning, a technical training school in San Diego, was sentenced in federal court on October 27 to 45 months in custody as a result of a multi-year scheme that defrauded the Department of Veterans Affairs out of almost $30 million in Post-9/11 G.I. Bill benefits, according to the U.S. Attorney's Office of the Southern District of California.

As a result of Shah's fraud, the VA issued over $11 million in tuition payments to Blue Star Learning, and over $18 million in housing allowances and stipends. In total, as a result of Shah's fraud, the VA lost $29,350,999. As laid out in court records, Shah's scheme appears to be one of the largest Post-9/11 G.I. Bill fraud cases that has been prosecuted around the country.

In order to receive funds from the VA under the Post-9/11 G.I. Bill, Blue Star Learning was required to have at least 15 percent non-veterans for each course for which the VA was paying educational benefits – a rule called the “85/15 Rule.” The “85/15 Rule” is designed to minimize the risk that veterans’ benefits are wasted on educational programs of little value and to ensure that the cost of a course is acceptable and paid on the open market by non-veterans.

As part of his multi-year fraud scheme, between March 2016 and June 2019, Shah lied to the VA about the percentage of non-veteran students at the school, and made up fake non-veteran students – when in fact nearly all of their business came from veteran students. He also created spreadsheets of fraudulent employment data, including false emails, phone numbers, jobs and employers to support made-up graduate employment data. And he falsely claimed that all of the students at the school were enrolled full-time. Shah’s lies ensured that Blue Star Learning received millions of dollars in VA education benefits that the school was not entitled to.

Blue Star Learning, which charged up to $20,560 per course, had close to 100% veteran students. Shah nonetheless repeatedly misrepresented to the California State Approving Agency for Veterans Education (“CSAAVE”) and the VA that Blue Star Learning was in compliance with the “85/15 Rule.” Shah took extraordinary efforts to deceive VA regulators regarding non-veteran students at the school, including creating fake enrollment agreements and student files for the purported non-veterans in each program. Shah emailed the VA 48 fraudulent enrollment agreements for fictitious people he represented were non-veteran students at Blue Star Learning, complete with fraudulent dates of birth, social security numbers, addresses, phone numbers and emails for each fraudulent non-veteran student.

Shah knew that the vast majority of Blue Star Learning graduates did not obtain jobs in the fields in which they were purportedly receiving training, and that the employment statistics on Blue Star Learning’s website were false. Shah nonetheless submitted fraudulent spreadsheets to CSAAVE claiming that all of the Blue Star Learning students listed were employed in the informational technology field. On these spreadsheets, Shah provided fraudulent phone numbers, email addresses, employers, and employer contact information for each student. Shah then took his fraud a step further: Because he knew CSAAVE could contact the students/employers to verify the data submitted, Shah hired individuals to create the fraudulent email addresses for the Blue Star Learning students, and directed these individuals, who resided overseas, to answer emails received at the fraudulent email addresses pretending to be satisfied Blue Star Learning graduates working in the information technology field.

Shah additionally created 30 fictitious companies that he listed as the employers on the fraudulent spreadsheets, and hired individuals to create fraudulent email addresses and domain names for each fictitious company. In a scheme reminiscent of Vandelay Industries, Shah directed a Blue Star Learning employee to purchase 30 cellular telephones, one for each fictitious employer, and had employees of Blue Star Learning create voicemail greetings on each cellular telephone so that it would appear that the fraudulent businesses were legitimate if CSAAVE called to check.

“This was an extraordinary fraud in terms of the elaborate deception, the years-long duration and the amount of money involved,” said U.S. Attorney Robert Brewer. “This defendant knowingly violated the rules to enrich himself, and for that he will go to prison.” Brewer commended prosecutor Michelle Wasserman and agents from the Department of Veterans Affairs Office of Inspector General and Federal Bureau of Investigation for excellent work on this case.

“The FBI worked with our partners at the VA-OIG to investigate this elaborate fraud scheme resulting in a loss of over $29 million dollars,” said FBI Special Agent in Charge Suzanne Turner. “Fraud affecting educational benefits meant for our military veterans will not be tolerated. Today, justice was served against the Shahs, the owners of Blue Star Learning, who put greed and deceit above the men and women of our U.S. military.”

American Legion Resolution No. 304: Support Accountability for Institutions of Higher Learning expresses strong support for legislation and federal agency action ensuring educational success and civilian workforce success of GI Bill users and military student program participants, and the VA, FBI, and California State Approving Agency should be applauded for effective interagency coordination supporting this.
